UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

8 | SHAWN GARRETT BAUTISTA, No. C 04-187 SI (pr)

9 Plaintiff,

ORDER DENYING MOTIONS AND SETTING BRIEFING SCHEDULE

10 || v.

11 || JIM BABCOCK, etc.; et al.,

Defendants.

14 A. Introduction

15 Shawn Garrett Bautista, in custody at the Santa Clara County Jail, filed this pro se civil 16 rights action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. The court determined that the complaint alleged 17 cognizable § 1983 claims against defendants Turbovich, Ramirez, and Hodges for retaliation.
18 Defendants moved for summary judgment. In response, Bautista moved to compel discovery 19 and to delay filing his opposition to the motion for summary judgment until he has received 20 discovery responses. Several problems in the parties' briefs lead the court to deny the motions.

22 || B. Defendants' Motion For Summary Judgment

Defendants' motion for summary judgment presents a confused view of the law of retaliation. First, the brief errs in suggesting that the allegedly retaliatory actions must violate a constitutional right. It is well-settled that a plaintiff asserting a retaliation claim need not show that the retaliatory action taken in response to his exercise of a constitutional right independently deprived him of a constitutional right. See, e.g., Mt. Healthy City Bd. of Educ. v. Doyle, 429

1 U.S. 274, 283 (1977) (absence of right to continued employment does not defeat claim for 2 retaliatory firing for First Amendment expression); Vignolo v. Miller, 120 F.3d 1075, 1078 (9th 3 Cir. 1997) (discharge from prison job for refusal to waive constitutional right states claim despite 4 no constitutional right to prison job); Pratt v. Rowland, 65 F.3d 802, 806 (9th Cir. 1995) 5 (retaliatory transfer would be actionable even though inmate has no constitutional right to be 6 held in a particular location or in a single cell). Despite this settled state of the law, defendants 7 repeatedly argue that their allegedly retaliatory conduct did not rise to the level of a 8 constitutional violation. They argue that the alleged threats do not give rise to a claim under § 9 1983, see Motion, p. 11,¹ and that inmates have limited constitutional rights to have erroneous 10 information expunged from their prison file, Motion, p. 11, and to have a particular 11 classification, id. at 12. That an inmate has no independent constitutional right to be free from 12 threats, to have accurate records or to have any particular classification says nothing about 13 whether depriving the inmate of these things for a retaliatory purpose can amount to a 14 constitutional violation. At best, defendants' arguments show that Bautista has no claims other 15 than his retaliation claims; at worst, they mislead by framing the retaliation debate incorrectly.

16 Second, the brief presents an inaccurate legal description regarding the harm or injury 17 required for a retaliation claim. Defendants contend that they are entitled to summary judgment 18 because the allegedly retaliatory conduct did not have a chilling effect on Bautista, as evidenced 19 by his continued litigiousness. This argument overlooks several Ninth Circuit cases that suggest 20 that the prisoner's continued litigation or grievance-filing activity is not a bar to a successful 21 retaliation claim. Rhodes v. Rowland, 408 F.3d 559, 568-69 (9th Cir. 2005), rather clearly states 22 that the fact that the prisoner continues with his First Amendment activity does not mean there 23 has not been a chilling effect. Although Rhodes was decided after defendants' motion was filed, 24 Ninth Circuit cases on the books before defendants' motion was filed also indicate that harm that 25 is more than minimal will almost always have a chilling effect sufficient for a retaliation claim.

28 ¹The two cases defendants cite on this point, Keenan v. Hall, 83 F.3d 1083, 1092 (9th Cir.
1996), and Gaut v. Sunn, 810 F.2d 923, 925 (9th Cir. 1987), are not even retaliation cases, and do not appear to stand for anything relevant to a retaliation claim.

1 See, e.g., Gomez v. Vernon, 255 F.3d 1118, 1127-28 (9th Cir. 2001); Hines v. Gomez, 108 F.3d
2 265 (9th Cir. 1997). Hines explained that the injury may be the retaliatory act's chilling effect
3 on the inmate's First Amendment rights, even if there is no demonstration of a more substantial 4 injury. Id. at 269. Rhodes stated that, at least at the pleading stage, the proper inquiry is 5 "'whether an official's acts would chill or silence a person of ordinary firmness from future First 6 Amendment activities.' . . . Because 'it would be unjust to allow a defendant to escape liability 7 for a First Amendment violation merely because an unusually determined plaintiff persists in his 8 protected activity,' [the prisoner] does not have to demonstrate that his speech was 'actually 9 inhibited or suppressed.'" Rhodes, 408 F.3d at 568-69 (internal citations omitted). Defendants 10 are incorrect to the extent they suggest Bautista does not have an actionable retaliation claim 11 because he continued to file grievances.

12 In light of these problems in defendants' motion, and the prisoner-plaintiff's limited 13 access to legal materials, the court is unwilling to decide the motion for summary judgment as 14 presented. A litigant's misstatement of the law is always a concern to the court, but especially 15 so in a case where the opponent is a pro se prisoner because it raises something akin to a notice 16 problem: a pro se prisoner untrained in law and with very limited access to legal materials might 17 not recognize his opponent's legal error and might simply attempt to prove his case within the 18 framework set up by opposing counsel's motion. For this reason, defendants' motion for 19 summary judgment will be denied, but without prejudice to defendants filing a new motion for 20 summary judgment that correctly states the law of retaliation and frames the dispute in a way 21 that the court can decide the motion based on the parties' presentations.

23 C. Bautista's Motion To Compel Discovery

24 The glaring problem in Bautista's motion to compel is that he did not make a good faith 25 effort to meet and confer before seeking court intervention in the discovery dispute.

26 The court generally is not involved in the discovery process and only becomes involved 27 when there is a dispute between the parties about discovery responses. Discovery requests and 28 responses normally are exchanged between the parties without any copy sent to the court. See

1 Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d) (listing discovery requests and responses that "must not" be filed with the 2 court until they are used in the proceeding or the court orders otherwise). Only when the parties 3 have a discovery dispute that they cannot resolve among themselves should the parties even 4 consider asking the court to intervene in the discovery process. The court does not have enough 5 time or resources to oversee all discovery, and therefore requires that the parties present to it 6 only their very specific disagreements. To promote the goal of addressing only very specific 7 disagreements (rather than becoming an overseer of all discovery), the court requires that the 8 parties meet and confer to try to resolve their disagreements before seeking court intervention.
9 See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(2)(B); N. D. Cal. Local Rule 37. Where, as here, one of the parties is 10 a prisoner, the court does not require in-person meetings and instead allows the prisoner and 11 defense counsel to meet and confer by telephone or exchange of letters. Although the format 12 of the meet-and-confer process changes, the substance of the rule remains the same: the parties 13 must engage in a good faith effort to meet and confer before seeking court intervention in any 14 discovery dispute.

15 Bautista's meet-and-confer letter to defense counsel was simply ridiculous in its assertion 16 that defendants "waived any right of privilege information, if any there was, when they decided 17 to violated the rights and privileges of the plaintiff's." Motion To Compel, Exh. 2 (spelling and 18 grammar errors in source). No reasonable attorney reading that assertion would have been 19 persuaded to reconsider any privilege that had been asserted. By making such a ridiculous 20 assertion, Bautista almost guaranteed that the meet-and-confer process would be unsuccessful.
21 Bautista's assertion in the letter that the responses were incomplete does not identify any 22 incompleteness other than that some documents had not been produced because a privilege had 23 been claimed. Bautista's meet-and-confer effort was not a good faith effort and thwarts the goal 24 of reducing court involvement in the discovery process. The court denies the motion to compel 25 because Bautista failed to make a good faith effort to meet and confer with opposing counsel 26 before he filed the motion. This denial is without prejudice to Bautista filing a new motion to 27 compel after he engages in a good faith effort to meet and confer with opposing counsel to 28 resolve any discovery dispute.

1 A few words of guidance for the parties in their discovery and resolution of discovery 2 disputes: First, Bautista cannot move to compel responses to requests he has "amended" after 3 the responses have been served. If Bautista wants to request additional or different materials, 4 he must submit a new discovery request to defendants.

5 Second, a request for production of documents under Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of 6 Civil Procedure can be used only for existing documents. A request for production of documents 7 cannot be used to ask for information to be compiled and questions answered. If Bautista wants 8 information (rather than documents) from defendants, he needs to use other discovery tools, e.g., 9 interrogatories, depositions, or requests for admissions.

10 Third, the court seriously questions defendants' assertion of privilege for an operations 11 manual or other documents that state standards for jail operations. The court recognizes the need 12 to avoid disclosure of confidential information to inmates -- such as the identity of an informant, 13 or a membership roster for a gang, or a weakness in security that may provide an avenue of 14 escape – but defendants appear to have taken an overly aggressive view of what needs to be kept 15 confidential for safety reasons. The court simply doesn't understand why the Santa Clara County 16 Jail policy and procedure manual must be kept confidential when other penal facilities' written 17 policies and procedures are not shrouded in such secrecy. See U.S. Bureau of Prisons Program 18 Statement 5100.07, Security Designation And Custody Classification Manual, available at 19 http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_007.pdf - Nov 30, 2004; Cal. Code Regs. title 15, § 20 3375 (Cal. Department of Corrections classification procedures). Unless defendants are able to 21 show something unusually sensitive in the jail's manual, it should be disclosed in discovery. The 22 court has considered the Sepulveda declaration but is unable to determine the merits of the 23 asserted need for confidentiality without seeing the manual itself. If defendants contend that the 24 manual cannot be disclosed to Bautista, they may file a motion for a protective order under 25 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(c). If they file such a motion, they should submit the manual 26 under seal for the court to evaluate the claims of confidentiality and should submit a declaration 27 from a knowledgeable person identifying each portion of the manual that they contend must be 28 kept confidential and explaining why it should not be disclosed to Bautista.

1 Fourth, reports that have been prepared regarding Bautista generally should be disclosed 2 to Bautista except as necessary to preserve jail safety. If defendants contend that the reports 3 concerning Bautista cannot be disclosed to him, they may file a motion for protective order. If 4 they file such a motion, they should submit the reports under seal for the court to evaluate the 5 claims of confidentiality and should submit a declaration from a knowledgeable person 6 identifying each portion of the reports that they contend must be kept confidential and explaining 7 why it presents a risk if disclosed to Bautista. If some portions of a document need to be 8 redacted to prevent the disclosure of confidential information, the court wants to see the 9 unredacted document to determine how much material genuinely needs to be redacted. Counsel 10 is reminded to comply with Local Rule 79-5(b) in filing any document under seal.

12 D. Amendment

13 The court received a document entitled "Plaintiff's Notice To Amend Complaint" on 14 December 16, 2005. Filing such a notice accomplishes nothing. If plaintiff wants to file an 15 amended complaint, he must file a motion to amend and attach to it a proposed amended 16 complaint. Construing the notice to be a motion to amend requires that it be DENIED because 17 the court cannot determine whether to allow an amended pleading without seeing it.

18 If plaintiff has claims that are against persons other than the existing defendants or are 19 unrelated to the retaliation claims already at issue, he should file a new civil rights action rather 20 than attempt to amend the existing complaint. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 20(a) (persons "may be joined 21 in one action as defendants if there is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the 22 alternative, any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or 23 series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all defendants 24 will arise in the action.")

28

1 E. Conclusion

2 Defendants' motion for summary judgment is DENIED without prejudice. (Docket # 21.)
3 Bautista's motion to compel is DENIED without prejudice. (Docket # 31.) In light of the denial 4 of the motion to compel, the motion to strike the opposition to that motion is DENIED as moot.
5 (Docket # 41.) To the extent the notice to amend complaint is construed as a motion to amend,
6 it is DENIED. (Docket # 46.)

7 The court prefers that the discovery problems be resolved before a new summary 8 judgment motion is filed and prefers that any motion for a protective order be resolved before 9 a motion to compel is made as to any remaining discovery disputes. The court therefore sets the 10 following briefing schedule for defendants to move for a protective order on the materials they 11 claim are privileged or otherwise confidential:

12 1. Any motion for a protective order must be filed and served by defendants 13 no later than March 3, 2006. Defendants are reminded to meet and confer before filing such a 14 motion. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

15 2. If defendants file a motion for a protective order, plaintiff must file and 16 serve his opposition no later than April 3, 2006.

17 c. Any reply brief from defendants must be filed and served no later than 18 April 14, 2006.

19 After the court rules on the motion for a protective order (or if no motion is filed by the 20 deadline), the court will set a schedule for plaintiff to file a motion to compel as to any remaining 21 discovery disputes. Plaintiff is reminded that he must engage in a good faith effort to meet and 22 confer to resolve any discovery dispute before he files a motion to compel.
